No, this is not the average American family. Twenty years ago Peter answered a convict pen-pal letter and met Marsh, who once managed to stay out of prison long enough to father two girls, Tina and Ann. Abandoned by their mother and with Marsh in prison, the two girls' unofficial adoptive father is Peter, who is gay. The girls live with their grandmother, Nana, a waitress at the Occluded Artery Diner, whose guiding motto in life is: "Bury me face down so the world can kiss my ass." When Marsh is unexpectedly paroled, 16-year-old Tina, full of raging hormones and anger, pushes Peter away with hopes that her father will stay out of jail this time, though Peter, Nana, and Ann harbor doubts. During the reunited family's vacation at Peter's beach house, to which Ted, Peter's new boyfriend is invited, a disturbing secret of Ann's and Tina's finally comes to light, shifting the family dynamics. Tina vents her rage on Peter when Marsh returns to jail for robbing the beach houses. Tina eventually realizes how important Peter is to her and Ann, and that fatherhood is not just a biological act, but years of love, caring, and devotion.
