Excerpt: ... full of condolence and congratulation with a-my Lord in every line, and your Lord/hip in every period. I will make the rafcal lick the dun; and, when he has flattered me till his tongue is parched with lies, I will upbraid him with his treafon, and turn my back upon him for ever. There are a fcore of bugs, or more, of the fame character, whom the beams of my profterity will warm into fervility, and whofe names will be left at my door before I have been ten days in town: but may eternal ignominy overtake me, if I do not make the tendereft vein in their hearts ach with my reproach J Whether the world will be converted in refpect towards me, I do not pretend to determine; its anger will, at all events, be leftened: but, be that as it may I can look it in the face with lefs fear than I was wont to do, and make it fmile upon my political career, though it may ftill hold a frowning afpect towards my moral character. i.Permittitty however, to affure you that whatever change may appear in me towards others, I fhall ever be the fame to you. The acquifition of fortune, and an elevation to honours, will not vary a line in my regard to thofe whofe friendfhip has been fo faithful to me as yours has been; nor fhall you ever have cayfe to repent your affiduouf kindnefe to me. There is a ballance in the human paffions,. and the mind that is awake to a fpirit of Revenge is equally infpired by the fentiments of Gratitude.. There is a dirty crew who fhall experience the former, while you may confide in my folemn affurance to you of a moft ample expiation of the latter. LETTER The SIXTEENTH., A propos; I mint beg of you to forward the enclosed letter to----- . With much difficulty I perfuaded her fome time ago to return to England; and I am apprehenfive fhe may be already in...
